ready.

The sun was about nine minutes late that morning. The yellow-legged rooster with its double-breasted comb and polousise tail, seemed to know all about it, for he sang in Chinese all the time the cook was frying pancakes, and mamma was unsanctifying her best back hair to go to the picture palace, a red roly poly with a glass roof, on wheels

You ought to have seen us cat breakfast! The baby stuck hers in one eye!
Nurse buttered baby's sponge and took it for a sweet potato; she thought it was a little overbaked, but worried half of it down with gravy before everybody laughed at her. The cook sat down in the batterdish, to have one good look at the yitty winky pinky booful; but who cares for pancakes now? When she arose, the yeast in the butter brought her up, papa made men-tion of some place, but mamma-said it was all right, if they could only get a good picture. Then we all dressed for the occasion. Then we all dressed for the occasion. Baby wore her white octaroon guipure redingote, with frilled polonaise and ginsing spatter dashes, a strip of stair carpet wrapped about her loins and fastened in two rows of skillets, with nine-pin in imitation of Brussels, a la

Mamma dressed in hallucination tulle, cut engore, with point lace ruffle en piquant, her overskirt was trimmed with watercresses in festoons, double box plaited with yellow buttons grouped under the tarleton, a la passamaquidy in two volumes. She wore her hair in fritters with rolls en trusse, fluting to the shoulders, and garnished with yellow sealing-wax in braids, three deep, terminating in a purple rinkymyjluk under the left ear. New style and very destaugy. Nurse had on her left-handed hoops with mansard roof on the extension.

Her bijouterie was crimped, rolled back and puffed, while a delicate catcolored squattermattoo hung suspend ed from her belt, giving way for a tri-angular pouff with ten buttons in satin brocatelle. Her pannier hung high and was ornamented with a German silver cofferdam, cut pompadour, with round tabs of yellow twilled galloon. Papa wore his candlestick coat, a fawn colored slithamaree on his left hip, the whole surrounded by an ashes of roses meringue, with two tucks and a balloon to match his galoot. His vest was embroidered in quarter seetions with bias pockets, streamers, and small green roses on the crown, philo-

At ten o'clock the procession moved in the following order: Nurse with baby. Proud mamma. Dignified parental.

Assistant nurse, with things. Cook's eyes. Neighbors' heads out of windows. Fitzbooby, baby's dog. Citizens ad libitum. At the picture gallery all was excite ment. "Is the picture man in?"

"Certainly madam; walk in." "Is it a good day?"
"The best I ever saw in fifty years' practise.

"Can you get a good one?"
"Oh, madam, a perfect one." "And will you good Mr. Pictureman?"
The best in the world.

" Are you sure?" With such a baby as yours, mad am, I could not fail! "Papa, do you hear that! Will you sit on her now!" At any time, madam."

"Do you think the morning sun is 'Much the best, madam. The oroiele comes to a paroxysm on the index better, while the sublunary focus radiates over the expression of the child more readily. Is it—is it—is it
